Dentons, the world's largest law firm, announces today that Joseph Guagliardo has joined the Firm's top-ranked Venture Technology and Emerging Growth Companies (VTG) practice as a partner resident in the Meatpacking NYC office.

Guagliardo has extensive experience representing public and private companies in a wide range of technology and intellectual property-related commercial transactions and technology subject matter. As a seasoned tech transactions lawyer who also draws on his prior business experience in the software industry, Guagliardo is known for his practical approach to navigating the increasing complexities facing the technology industry where business, technical and legal/regulatory interests are often in conflict. His experience and approach to counseling serves his clients well, whether drafting and negotiating commercial agreements or acting as outside general counsel for technology companies.

"Joe is accustomed to working with management teams of innovative tech companies across a variety of sectors," said Victor Boyajian, Chair of Dentons' Global Venture Technology practice. "His experience on the commercial side of transactions will have an immediate positive impact given the surge in demand we've seen for this expertise.
