Overview

Andrew Klump is a member of the Corporate practice group, where he advises clients across many industries on a wide range of corporate transactional matters. Andrew's experience includes mergers and acquisitions, real estate transactions, joint ventures, business formation, corporate governance, planning and contracts.

Andrew often represents clients in manufacturing, health care, real estate development, and software and technology. He is able to help clients with a variety of needs throughout the business lifecycle and often serves as a point of contact for all their legal needs.

Before joining the Firm, Andrew was a corporate attorney at an international law firm. He also previously served as in-house corporate counsel for an international hotel management company, where he handled numerous corporate and hospitality-related matters.

While in law school, Andrew was a member of the University of Louisville Law Review. During that time, Andrew spent time in the legal departments of Churchill Downs Inc. and Tempur Sealy International Inc., as well as at a small bankruptcy firm. As a law student, Andrew focused primarily on business law, including the development of both worker and consumer cooperative business models. Andrew also provided pro bono hours to draft the bylaws for the Louisville Community Grocery, a cooperative grocery aiming to alleviate food insecurity in Louisville.
