

Overview

A rigorous regulatory and reporting landscape, complex stakeholder and business relationships, increasing competition, volatile markets and unsolicited takeover bids are some of the challenges faced by energy sector participants.

Yet opportunity abounds with rising demand for energy in Asia, the increasing presence of Chinese investors and Australia's growth potential in expanding production and exports given recent significant investment in infrastructure assets and new technology.

Our energy team can help you leverage the opportunities. As your business partner, we will anticipate market advances, navigate regulatory regimes and explore strategies for growth.

As a global practice with more than 40 offices in China, and offices in Hong Kong, Singapore, South Korea, Taiwan, Mongolia and Papua New Guinea, rely on a team who routinely handles complex cross-border transactions for multinational energy companies and global investors.

Whether you require advice on transactions, finance, construction, regulation, environmental, tax, workplace health and safety or disputes, you will be supported by a team with experience across all facets of the sector. Recent projects have involved the areas of upstream and downstream oil and gas, coal, pipelines and maritime transportation, electricity and renewable energy.

For infrastructure and logistics planning, we will guide you through the entire process to help establish and maintain competitive and sustainable operations by attracting finance, engaging local stakeholders, efficiently securing project approvals, addressing health and safety concerns and ensuring regulatory compliance.

As one of the longest-standing energy practices in the Asia Pacific, benefit from an energy team noted for its proficiency and cross-border capability in the marketplace and which has been repeatedly recognized as a key adviser in the region, as well as the "go to" counsel for owners, investors, stakeholders and governments on projects in Australia, Asia, the Pacific Islands and the United States.

Whether you are an energy company, project sponsor, transport provider, financial institution, utility or government, your potential for growth has the backing of the global team.
