

Financial Institutions in Central Asia

Overview

Central Asia is one of the pivotal regions of the world. Located at the core of Eurasia, it represents an important link between two large and dynamic continental economies. Financial institutions in Central Asia face both challenges and opportunities as the banking sector is restructured and the region experiences further European and global integration. Meanwhile, international organizations are taking a more active role in supporting microfinance and building sound legal, regulatory and supervisory frameworks for financial activity in the region.

In this environment of continual change, turn to Dentons' team of Financial Institutions lawyers in Central Asia. As your partner on the ground, we guide you through local regulatory environments and provide you with seasoned advice from a global perspective. Whether you need help with licensing, currency control or other regulatory requirements, we are ready to offer first-class assistance.

When your matters become contentious, our financial services litigation lawyers are on hand, ready to protect your interests. Having represented leading financial institutions in significant and high-profile disputes, we offer experience and counsel you can rely on.
