

Overview

Dentons has the largest network of offices of any law firm present in the Middle East. A key component of our practice is the work we do for financial institutions operating across the Gulf region. With an extensive and well-established network of offices and associated firms throughout the Middle East, we work with a wide array of institutions of every size, focus and geography. We have been on the ground serving clients for 50 years, and many of our 110 legal professionals are bilingual Arabic and English speakers.

Whether working with local, regional or multinational financial institutions, we appreciate the needs of all parties to the transactions on which we advise. From banks and insurance companies to accounting firms, trading houses, credit payment providers and Islamic Finance institutions, we are adept at advising you on financings, regulation, litigation, capital markets, cards and payments and distressed situations.

We are recognized internationally for our depth of understanding of the legal complexities that exist—whether you are an investor seeking to put money to work in the Middle East or already on the ground and looking to access capital, look to Dentons. Our extensive deal experience working for both borrowers and lenders in the region allows us to give you deep insights into market trends, while our know-how of the workings of the global financial services industry helps us adapt global innovations to the Middle Eastern market for your benefit.

Our Middle East team is renowned as a leader in many areas. Turn to Dentons and take advantage of our ability to deliver sector-specific expertise alongside the full range of commercial legal services, with lawyers who can communicate with local officials in their own language to get things done.

We can assist you in the following areas:

- Islamic finance
