

Overview

Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) play a wide variety of roles around the world. Balancing political, business and community drivers, they also play an increasingly important part in influencing policy that can directly affect your business operations.

You face the challenge of working in or dealing with organizations and corporations where individual opinions can carry enormous weight, and the need for results is intense. Knowledge of socioeconomic and geopolitical realities is essential to achieving your aims and building relationships on a local and international level.

Whether you operate in mature or developing markets, you need representation that can help drive your aims. You need lawyers who understand the value and importance of key influencers, and who can power your networking for the maximum positive effect on your business.

Dentons can help you push your agenda in all these environments. Offering advice from former diplomats and regional professionals, we can work with you to navigate the legal and practical realities necessary for furthering your business objectives, within or across from NGO stakeholders. Look to our lawyers and other professionals for effective solutions, including:

- Corporate governance
- Project development and funding
- Social impact assessments and market entry
- Corporate social responsibility
- Crisis communications
- Advocacy
- Regulatory counsel.
