

Infrastructure and PPP in Central Asia

Overview

Infrastructure has long been a core sector in Central Asia. Great opportunities abound due to tremendous infrastructure investments in this resource-rich region. Public-Private Partnership (PPP) legislation, however, is only in its earliest stages, making for a challenging legal framework. This is why it's critical to have the most knowledgeable lawyers and professionals working for you.

Dentons knows the law in this developing area, such as Kazakhstan's recently approved Law on New Forms of PPP, which has significantly improved and broadened the legal scope governing relations between the state and the private sector in PPP projects. In jurisdictions lacking concession law, various contracts outside of a PPP framework are possible between the state and the contractor.

Look to Dentons as your trusted advisor in this particularly specialized business environment. Not only do we interact with public authorities, we have even assisted in drafting new PPP legislation in the region.

Rely on our team for the insight and guidance to help identify your best options and carry out your projects. No matter the jurisdiction or the sector, we understand the market and find solutions you can use.

Your Key Contacts

Central Asia

James E. Hogan

Office Managing Partner,
Paris

D+33 1 42 68 48 65

james.hogan@dentons.com

Aigoul Kenjebayeva

Kazakhstan and Central Asia
Managing Partner, Almaty

D+7 727 258 2380

aigoul.kenjebayeva@dentons.com

Birzhan Zharasbayev

Office Managing Partner,
Nur-Sultan

D+7 7172 55 2151

birzhan.zharasbayev@dentons.com