

Overview

Joint ventures involving insurance require partners you can trust. Dentons' understanding of insurance holding company regulations and related affiliation issues guides our practical advice on the unique issues applicable to investments in insurance companies and their affiliates.

Turn to our experience for support in:

- Analyzing various businesses to determine the best corporate structure for joint ventures involving insurance
- Maintaining relations with your joint venture partners
- Determining whether state licensure requirements will affect your joint venture
- Finding the best methods to protect yourself, your intellectual property and trade secrets
- Mitigating any future liability and responsibility for losses that participants in joint ventures may endure.

We also provide advice to joint ventures regarding the application of insurance laws to nontraditional insurance and other financial transactions, regulatory compliance and compliance programs and how such issues will affect the operation of the joint venture.

Dentons' experience with insurance-related joint ventures is integral to avoiding undesirable, unforeseen taxation and mitigating any future detrimental tax, liability and ownership issues in joint ventures.
