

Overview

The world of entertainment has changed. Some of the most successful companies in recent years have focused their businesses on social networking, digital publishing, movie and music downloads, streaming audio and video content, online ad targeting and other innovative business models that deliver media and entertainment content to consumers, whenever, wherever and however they want it. Truly a global marketplace, the digital media space is filled with opportunity. Across music, film, TV, books, social media and games, there is growing, sustained interest from traditional investors as well as venture capital funds, angel investors, private equity firms and investment banks.

While Web and mobile distribution of digital media and content creates new markets and opportunities, it also opens the door to equally fast-moving competitors and a whole new range of issues, including piracy and cybercrime, e-commerce and spam legislation, data protection and customer privacy. These are just a few of the challenges companies operating in the digital media sector must face.

You need a firm that understands the opportunities and risks facing your industry. A firm that is agile and responsive to market needs and to the changing face of the digital media sector, and as innovative as the people who work in this industry. You need Dentons.
