

Overview

As mature economies grow and new economies develop, the world is witnessing groundbreaking new infrastructure projects and multi-billion dollar upgrades of aging transport systems. Yet the development of these projects must go hand-in-hand with the creation and expansion of the appropriate legislative and contractual framework. During the past 20 years governments and procuring authorities around the world have turned increasingly to the private sector for the expertise required to grow long-established and promising transport sectors. However, private sector involvement often depends on solid legal foundations, and existing laws and regulations may seem discouraging to investors.

Dentons has been at the forefront of privatization and regulation of the transport sector around the world. We advise state entities on private sector participation in the transport industry and the appropriate legislative framework to govern such participation. Our lawyers have drafted new primary and secondary legislation and we assist developing and established economies in applying international best practice to their transport sectors. We can bring a unique perspective. We can help you structure your transport sector to act as a catalyst for growth and bring in the investment you need.

Don't just take our word for it. According to Chambers 2012, a client said of Dentons: "...the work is absolutely excellent, and makes our life much easier—they anticipate what we need."
