

Overview

The financial success of any project depends on a number of critical components, all of which must work together seamlessly. One of the most critical is a project's operations and maintenance (O&M) program. To ensure that all of the interrelated technical, legal and financial aspects of an O&M program are properly established, it makes sense to work with a partner who has experience working with all of the various stakeholders who have an interest in a project's success.

The lawyers at Dentons have worked with operators, owners, contractors, lenders and governments on a wide variety of projects, from small scale manufacturing facilities to large industrial projects involving numerous functionalities. We have helped to structure projects in every sector, including oil and gas, power, manufacturing, transportation, and the leisure and entertainment industries, and understand the needs of the parties involved.
