

Overview

Government policies and measures affecting trade can threaten your business strategy. The US Trade practice covers the full range of international trade issues facing both US and non-US companies. Our lawyers can advise you on trade defense proceedings at US government agencies—including the US Department of Commerce, the Office of the US Trade Representative and the International Trade Commission—as well as World Trade Organization (WTO) consultations and disputes, customs and tariff issues and export control and sanctions matters.

No matter your industry or geography, our experienced lawyers have the targeted know-how to resolve trade disputes in the US, at the WTO and elsewhere. We also can assist you with regulatory matters involving goods and services crossing borders, including rules for preferential trade agreements; export controls and sanction issues, as well as other labeling, Buy America and consumer safety issues. We work with you on developing overall trade policies for entering and operating in the US market, and will guide you on working with Congress and relevant agencies.

When you leverage our direct contacts with regulators and decision-makers, you will develop appropriate strategies to steer through the changes in regulations and practice.

Our lawyers and professionals monitor closely the rules and practices of the US government agencies which oversee export control and sanction regulations to help you navigate this ever-changing landscape. We will work with you to develop flexible strategies that maximize export and import options without running into risks, present and future, of non-compliance.

Know your rights and obligations. Defend and expand. With Dentons, you secure a collaborative partner to tackle all trade disputes, bilateral agreements, trade remedies and customs procedures.
