

Public International Law in the Manufacturing Sector in United States

Public International Law

The flow of global trade and investment is in many respects a product of significant expansion of treaties on a variety of subjects. These treaties provide the legal infrastructure on which global business is based. Public international law has become a key feature of today's world, not only for sovereign states and intergovernmental organizations but also for multinational corporations and individuals.

Our clients routinely face these and other issues:

- State and diplomatic immunity
- Maritime boundaries
- Aviation
- World Trade Organization and regional free trade agreements
- Water rights
- Investment treaties.

As a global law firm acting on behalf of countries and territories, international organizations, state enterprises and multinational corporations and businesspeople, Dentons' lawyers have a comprehensive understanding of and experience in addressing these and other matters of public international law.

Dentons fields a team of lawyers with advanced degrees in public international law. Many have served previously as senior members of the legal departments of ministries of foreign affairs and intergovernmental organizations, or as law clerks in the International Court of Justice and other international tribunals. With our mastery of a range of high-ranking administrative sectors and our familiarity with the practice of substantive law, Dentons is uniquely positioned to assist you with issues of public international law.
