

Overview

Turkey has continued to show growth in recent years through in particular infrastructural and industrial expansion, and in the energy, media, real estate, and services sectors. Overall, the country is regarded as a major market, and a relative safe haven from the rigors of the Eurozone and the difficulties of many emerging markets. There is an attractive legal regime for inward investment and a sizable major project deal pipeline. For these reasons and based on strong demographics, it comes as no surprise that the country continues to attract significant amounts of foreign and local direct investment. However, doing business in Turkey is not without its challenges.

Partner with Dentons and confidently navigate these challenges. Enjoy the benefits of a dynamic law firm that combines technical expertise and commercial insight with local know-how. Our Istanbul office now has 75-plus attorneys, is highly ranked in key legal directories and has the capacity on the ground in Turkey to deliver. Whether you are seeking legal assistance on e.g. mergers and acquisitions, local sector-specific regulation and competition law, banking and finance, capital markets, dispute resolution, real estate, corporate, or energy sector related issues, you can rely on Dentons to produce your desired results.
