

Overview

Collectively as a region and separately as individual countries, Central and Eastern Europe present enormous opportunities. Stable and competitively priced, these growing economies boast huge potential for expansion, thanks to their highly concentrated markets and hungry business communities. Central and Eastern European companies tap well-educated workforces with boundless potential for innovative thinking and entrepreneurial activity.

Dentons' legacy firms were pioneers in advising international clients on the largest and most complex transactions in Central and Eastern European jurisdictions during the post-Cold War emergence of their capitalist economies. Today, Dentons remains the preferred legal advisor in the region, handling the most high-profile deals and disputes. Clients trust the highly experienced lawyers in our offices in Bratislava, Bucharest, Budapest, Istanbul, Kyiv (Kiev), Moscow, Prague, St. Petersburg and Warsaw, which are connected to a network of strategically placed alliances elsewhere in the wider region.

Wherever our clients do business, that's where we can be found. Our team can advise you on legal and business considerations in the key nations and jurisdictions across this vast region, as well as help you navigate cross-border and global transactions.

Work with our interdisciplinary teams of lawyers and their global colleagues for legal services that draw on the Firm's collective expertise. We can provide a full complement of services covering all aspects of your deal's structure, from initial incorporation to tax implications. We provide flexible, responsive advice that can help you understand the differences between local laws and approaches in the region. Our dedicated lawyers and professionals advise on virtually every sector relevant to Central and Eastern Europe, including:

- Dispute resolution
- Manufacturing
- Agribusiness
- Real estate
- Financial services
- Capital markets
- Energy
- Mining
- IT
- Intellectual property
- Infrastructure development.
