

Overview

Buenos Aires is a major cosmopolitan city in Latin America that is culturally vibrant and an undisputed leader in trade, finance, gastronomy, fashion, art, education, and entertainment.

Argentina is a key player in South America and a member of Mercosur, a trading block that also includes Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay. Due to its geopolitical and economic importance, Argentina is also a member of the G-20, which encompasses the world's major economies, and a part of the group of the new industrialized countries (NICs).

Benefiting from rich natural resources, a diversified industrial base, a well-educated work force and a strong professional services sector, Argentina's economy is the second most developed and important in South America. The income per capita is one of the highest in the region and the World Bank ranks Argentina 27th according to its nominal GDP. Argentina is also one of the most advanced and efficient food producers in the world, is becoming a relevant oil and gas producer and is showing enormous growth in the knowledge industry.
