

Overview

As Scotland's largest city, Glasgow is a thriving economic hub home to businesses across a range of industries. In coordination with our Edinburgh and Aberdeen offices, our Glasgow office services businesses based in the city, those based in the surrounding areas, and the many national and international companies doing business in the region.

Our presence in Scotland enables us to provide our clients from around the world with a full spectrum of legal advice combining both local and global knowledge in banking and finance, capital projects, commercial dispute resolution, construction and engineering, corporate, employment and pensions, energy and natural resources, EU, competition and regulatory, financial services, food and drink, housing and care, IP and technology, planning and environmental, private client and charities, property, public sector, and tax.

Situated in the city's cultural and commercial center adjacent to the City Chambers, the Glasgow office is within a five minute walk of Queen Street train station and less than a 10 minute walk from Glasgow Central train station.
