

Overview

The Albany office of Dentons is home to one of New York's leading government affairs and administrative law practices, representing clients before federal and state courts and state agencies for more than 25 years. We draw on the rich and varied experience of our lawyers and public policy professionals.

The effectiveness of our Albany lawyers and other professionals is enhanced by their broad experience within government at the state and local levels in New York. Our Albany office includes former elected officials; legal counsel to various governors; top county officials; staffers in the Office of the Attorney General, the Senate, the Assembly and the executive branch; and legal counsel to municipalities and government agencies and entities.

This broad spectrum of experience allows Dentons' Albany team to assist you in effectively navigating the public policy and regulatory world of state, city and local government. We understand how to manage Albany's political environment and the state's regulatory framework for your benefit. We continually monitor the legislative and regulatory activities of state government to keep you abreast of all developments and work to ensure that your position on any issue is recognized and understood by the relevant stakeholders.
