Global Situation Update: May 3, 2022

WHAT WE'RE WATCHING

At last week's Boao Asia Forum, Chinese President Xi Jinping proposed a vision for international order which would uphold the principle of "indivisible security." The idea that the security of a state is inseparable from that of others in the region is oft cited by Russia, and this is the first time a Chinese official has argued for this concept outside of the Russia-Ukraine context, in which China blamed the war on the eastern expansion of NATO.

President Xi's comments have implications for US strategy towards Taiwan and the South China Sea. If China views actions by the US or its allies in the region as disregarding Beijing's security concerns, China could invoke "indivisible security" and retaliate, leading to potential armed conflict. This could also mean possible preemptive military action on the part of China in the name of guarding its own security interests.

Ukraine War Impact: Growing Policy Convergence between the US and EU on China

The impact of the Ukraine war on the global geopolitical landscape is accelerating trends and creating new ones as democratic leaders reassesses the risks associated with doing business with authoritarian governments using coercive instruments of power. The April virtual summit between the EU and China demonstrated a hardening of the EU position and an understanding that expanding trade relations can no longer be the central priority, with political concessions a necessary byproduct to achieve progress.

At the summit, the EU put the Ukraine war front and center, pressing China on its move as a member of the UN Security Council not to criticize Russian aggression against Ukraine's sovereignty. China's response that the EU should have an independent policy from that of the US, while declining to discuss the EU's concerns, has had the opposite impact, driving closer alignment between the US and EU on the view that China should be seen as a strategic competitor or rival, not just a trade partner.

The April 1 summit was meant to put the signing of the Comprehensive Agreement on Investment back on track. The signing of the agreement has been delayed due to the pandemic and growing discomfort in European capitals over a range of Chinese behavior, including reported human rights violations in Xinjiang, Chinese sanctions on EU parliamentarians, EU uneasiness over China's efforts to dominate key strategic technologies, China's actions in the South China Seas and military pressure on Taiwan, and trade pressure against Lithuania. Prior to the Ukraine war, there was some optimism that the parties could work through these issues, with a goal of an investment agreement designed to expand bilateral trade well beyond the current 2 billion euros a day. However, the Ukraine war gave immediate political weight to the risks of expanding ties to China in terms of economic overdependence, erosion of the rule of law and respect for state sovereignty and the potential for the use of coercive diplomacy against EU countries over Taiwan. EU leaders, rather than seeking a trade agreement during the talks, decided to send a political message warning China against providing military or economic assistance Russia. Unsurprisingly, the summit ended with no deliverables and no joint statement in what is being called a “dialogue of the deaf.”

Western analysts assess that China has misjudged the significance of deciding to provide Russia with political cover for invading Ukraine and may yet adjust course. According to China expert Jacques deLisle, “[c]ontinuing commitments to limitless cooperation with Russia, suggesting blame for the war lay with NATO expansion, insisting Europe adopt an “independent” China policy, and inflated—and hedged—self-presentation as a neutral peace-broker will not help China’s relations with the EU or the US.” In a press conference after the summit, European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen suggested that China cannot afford to sacrifice its commercial relationship with the EU, with daily trade between the EU and China amounting to two billion euros, while Sino-Russian trade comes to just 330 million.

In a nod to the urgency of addressing China’s support for Russia, the US and EU moved up the third high-level meeting of the US-EU Dialogue on China to late April. Readouts of that meeting further suggest an alignment of views on China and agreement that, should China undermine sanctions on Russia or provide any form of support for Russia’s aggression against Ukraine, the US and EU would coordinate on “consequences” in their respective relationships with China. The US and EU also agreed to continue to focus on upholding international law and principles, the centrality of the UN Charter, and respect for human rights. The readouts expressed particular concern over recent incidents of economic coercion by China and pledged cooperation in addressing growing instances of economic coercion.

Increased cooperation between the EU and US will likely be on display at the upcoming second ministerial level meeting of the transatlantic Trade and Technology Council (TTC) on May 15-16 in France. While Russia will be the primary focus, the TTC will also discuss further controls on emerging technologies, including work done by a TTC subgroup dedicated to sharing expertise on artificial intelligence – technology China is seeking to dominate. The agenda includes a “strategic standardization information” mechanism to allow Washington and Brussels to coordinate their approaches to global standard-setting, pushing back against Chinese efforts to write the rules of the road in Beijing's favor. According to Noah Barkin, a China expert with the German Marshall Fund of the United States, outbound investment screening may be on the agenda, a tool designed to address the risk that companies, which face controls on the export of certain technologies to China, could decide to set up shop in the country to evade controls by producing them there. When investment screening was first discussed, it was considered an extreme American idea; now it is being considered by the TTC.

How far the US and EU will go in the effort to sway China to play a constructive role in convincing Russia to end its aggression against Ukraine is not clear. Current efforts focus on messaging and warning of consequences. Thus far, senior US officials state that they have not detected overt Chinese military and economic support, assessing that warning may be deterring Beijing. However, US officials remain concerned about China's refusal to condemn Russia's actions in Ukraine and Beijing's continued dissemination of Russian disinformation.

The potential consequences have not been aired in public. The US Trade Representative (USTR) has yet to signal its plans to proceed with a legally required review over the next several months of tariffs that the Trump Administration imposed on $350 billion worth of Chinese goods. The first batch of 301 tariffs on $34 billion worth of Chinese goods are set to expire on July 6, the second group on $16 billion on Aug. 23 and the third group on $200 billion on Sept. 24. A decision to extend the tariffs would be a clear escalation by the Biden Administration, which has been reviewing and recalibrating US trade policy on China after the hardline Trump approach. Alternatively, the US and EU could coordinate on targeted sanctions against companies assisting Russia evade sanctions, either through enforcement actions or a broader secondary sanctions program. For western businesses, China's position on Ukraine has increased the reputational costs on doing business with and in China, while adding new operational risks to existing challenges of supply chain disruption and resource nationalization.

Ukraine War Update: Russian Filtration Camps, Russian Retaliatory Sanctions, Indian G-7 Invitation

The US assesses that Russia is intensifying forced transfers of local populations in the areas it controls in Ukraine's south and east to Russia or to Russia-controlled parts of the Donbas via so-called "filtration camps."

Political Developments

Michael Carpenter, US ambassador to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), said, "We're seeing credible reporting that Russia's forces are rounding up the local civilian populations in these areas, detaining them in these camps, and then brutally interrogating them for any supposed links to the Ukrainian Government or to independent media. There are reports that those suspected of having any connections of this sort are being beaten or tortured before they're transferred to the so-called 'Donetsk People's Republic,' where many are reportedly disappeared or murdered."

British Prime Minister Johnson plans to announce during a remote address to the Ukrainian parliament, plans to provide an additional £300 million ($375 million) in military aid for Ukraine.

Pope Francis has asked for a meeting in Moscow with Russian President Putin to try to stop the war in Ukraine but has not received a reply.

Tensions between Israel and Russia spiked after Russia's foreign minister compared Ukrainian President Zelensky, who is Jewish, to Adolf Hitler and accused Jews of anti-Semitism, remarks Israel strongly condemned.

All Russian soccer clubs have been barred from taking part in the 2022/23 season of the Champions League, European football's governing body UEFA announced yesterday.

Internet service disruption monitor NetBlocks said Russia has rerouted internet traffic in the Ukrainian region of Kherson, through Russia to tighten its grip on information and exert control.

Ukraine War Update: Russian Filtration Camps, Russian Retaliatory Sanctions, Indian G-7 Invitation

Russian forces on Monday continued pressing into eastern Ukraine's Donbas region, with heavy fighting north of the town of Slovyansk. Ukrainian forces Monday blew up a bridge between Slovyansk and the town of Lyman that is under Russian attack, a move designed to slow down the Russian advance.

The Institute for the Study of War reported that Russian forces did not conduct any confirmed ground attacks in Ukraine on May 2. Russian troops on the Donetsk-Luhansk frontline and Southern Axis continued to regroup, likely in preparation for renewed offensives or to resist or reverse Ukrainian counter-offensives.

UK military intelligence assessed failures both in strategic planning and operational execution have left Russia unable to translate numerical strength into decisive advantage.

Humanitarian Developments

An unknown number of civilians were evacuated from the city of Mariupol on Monday, and evacuation efforts under UN and Red Cross supervision will resume today. According to Mariupol's mayor, more than 200 civilians are still holed up with fighters in the steel plant.

Buses under UN supervision carrying about 100 civilian evacuees from the Azovstal steel plant in Mariupol from Sunday are expected to arrive in Zaporizhzhia on today, after the convoy's journey had been delayed by Russian checkpoints.

Russia's Defense Ministry said more than one million people had been taken to Russia from Ukraine since the war began, claiming humanitarian protection. However, the Ukraine government says its citizens are being taken to Russia against their will.

Economic Developments

The EU expects to release its sixth sanctions package targeting Moscow over its invasion of Ukraine this week. Senior EU diplomats said that the 27-country bloc was likely to propose a phased ending purchases of Russian crude oil before the end of 2022, as well as a ban on purchases of Russian refined oil products by year-end, while noting that Russia may end its supply of gas to member states at any moment. Slovakia and Hungary would get additional time to implement the embargo because of their particularly high dependence on Russian oil. The sanctions package will also include additional Russian banks to be barred from the global SWIFT
