Public-private partnerships (PPPs) have increasingly become a common international structure for the delivery of infrastructure, offering the opportunity for governments and non-governmental bodies to complete projects more efficiently by sharing risks and responsibilities differently as compared with traditional procurement methods.

These types of structures can also offer better protection against schedule and cost overruns, and give the private sector the chance to bring innovation to the design, construction, operation and maintenance of public infrastructure.

In Ukraine PPPs could help to deliver critical infrastructure across the country. Recently the Ministry of Infrastructure of Ukraine, the State Agency of Roads of Ukraine (Ukravtodor), the World Bank and the International Finance Corporation presented their first public-private partnership program in the roads sector, aimed at engaging the private sector in Ukraine's road network.

More than 500 assets in Ukraine will be subject to privatization in 2021. Over 50 of them are objects of mid-size or large privatizations.
