Amsterdam-based Arno Voerman, who joined Dentons in April 2020 to lead the newly created FinTech team in the Netherlands, has been granted Band 1 ranking. He is the only lawyer in the Netherlands to have earned a top tier rating. According to Chambers and Partners, "Voerman is widely recognized by peers and clients alike as one of the foremost experts in the country in the area of FinTech and payments. He is a founding member of Holland FinTech, and has recently published a textbook on PSD2."

Jesús Mardomingo, Head of the Banking and Finance and FinTech teams in Madrid, received a Band 3 ranking. According to Chambers and Partners, he "is lauded by peers for his prowess in financial regulatory matters, and in Spain heads Dentons' FinTech team as part of its banking and finance practice. He is an expert on EU regulatory issues in the financial sector. Mardomingo brings strong cross-border capabilities, and has considerable experience in assisting banks and financial institutions in strategic joint ventures and in advising on the regulatory framework around e-payments and cryptocurrencies."

A counsel in the Banking and Finance group in Toronto, Tracy Molino received a Band 3 ranking. She has extensive experience with payments law and technology, with a focus on FinTech, PayTech and other innovative technologies including blockchain. A client interviewed for Chambers FinTech said, "She had general counsel experience that was very practical and positive for us. She has lived in our shoes and knows we're looking for strategic guidance, not simply vanilla legal advice. The advice was very thorough, on point and really helpful."
