大成 DENTONS

March 12, 2020

As the global COVID-19 public health emergency continues to spread and create challenges for families and businesses worldwide, we wanted to share with you how Dentons is addressing many of the same challenges that our clients may be facing and to offer our assistance, should it be helpful.

Dentons represents clients in 75 countries, including virtually every location where COVID-19 has already had a serious impact. While our principal concern is with the humanitarian nature of the pandemic, we have focused the extraordinary depth and breadth of our global resources to ensure we remain available to serve our clients during this challenging time despite travel restrictions, government orders, and other challenges that impact traditional ways of doing business.

More than one month ago, we activated Dentons' Global Pandemic Preparedness Task Force to ensure that all our people and our clients are able to take advantage of the most current and advanced thinking, resources, and talent pool available to manage and mitigate the impact of the virus as it spreads around the world.

Our Task Force meets on a daily basis to share information from leading health authorities, governments, and global and local businesses and advisors to ensure our standards and resources are second to none in ensuring Dentons' ability to protect our people and serve clients during this time.

In addition to our ongoing work for clients, we have also assembled subject matter experts and resources around the world so that we can advise our clients across a wide range of issues you may be encountering in the markets where you operate.

We have best practice business continuity processes in place across Dentons, and we remain ready, able, and prepared to serve our clients during this time.

Please do not hesitate to contact your relationship partner, or either of us, if you have any questions about our own preparedness or if we can be of assistance in ensuring your ability to address these new challenges. We recognize that this may be a prolonged effort, and wanted you to be fully aware of Dentons' commitment to help you navigate challenges and advance your business objectives.
