Agenda

- The latest on mandatory vaccination policies
- Health and safety update
- What federally regulated employers need to know about Federal Workplace Harassment laws

The latest on mandatory vaccination policies

Andy Pushalik

Mandatory vaccination policies

What the caselaw says so far...

- Mandatory vaccination policies are reasonable and consistent with an employer's health and safety obligations and management rights under collective bargaining agreements.
- Requiring unvaccinated employees to test before accessing a workplace is reasonable.
- Employers are generally responsible to pay for the cost of rapid tests but are not required to pay employees for their time spent performing the rapid test.

There are few government restrictions. Is it still reasonable to have a mandatory vaccination policy for my workplace?

- Extendicare Lynde Creek Retirement Residence v. UFCW, Local 175 (Raymond), April 1, 2022
- Workplace policy requires all newly hired employees to be fully vaccinated as a condition of employment and requires all existing employees effective from October 12, 2021 to be fully immunized/vaccinated (subject to the Human Rights Code)
- Employees who are not fully vaccinated are placed on an unpaid leave of absence and may be subject to additional corrective action up to and including termination
- Parties asked that the Arbitrator consider the reasonableness and lawfulness of the Policy in the context of the Government and public health authorities recently reducing or eliminating various vaccination and other COVID-19 restrictions for retirement homes, long-term care homes and more generally, other facilities and venues

There are few government restrictions. Is it still reasonable to have a mandatory vaccination policy for my workplace?

- Arbitrator ruled that workplace policy remained a reasonable workplace rule “...even in the context of the Ontario Government and other public health authorities recently reducing or eliminating various vaccination and other COVID-19 related requirements for staff, contractors, visitors in the context of retirement homes, long-term care homes and, more generally, other facilities and venues.”

COVID-19 remains a significant threat to Health & Safety

Maple Leaf Foods Inc., Brantford Facility v United Food and Commercial Workers Canada, Local 175, 2022 CanLII 28285 (Chauvin), April 10, 2022

“I do not find that as of now COVID-19 has receded, has diminished risks, and no longer is an exceptional threat to health. I find this even though the Company has announced that as of as of April 4, 2022 some of its COVID-19 precautionary procedures will no longer be mandatory, but will remain optional (I am not aware of whether these precautionary procedures were actually discontinued), and that governments in Ontario and elsewhere have reduced and even removed some of their COVID-19 precautionary procedures and limitations. The governmental procedures and limitations have varied from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, and have been implemented, removed, and then re-implemented at various times, as the numerous and different waves of COVID-19 have arrived, receded and then returned, sometimes in greater magnitude, and with different and very challenging risks and variants. Indeed, as of April 10, 2022, the statistics regarding COVID-19 infections, hospitalizations and deaths are rising in Ontario, and around the world, in what is now being referred to as the sixth wave of COVID-19, with a new variant. This may be due to the reductions and eliminations of the COVID-19 precautionary measures. As such, it is very difficult to predict when it is safe, and when it is not safe, to reduce COVID-19 precautionary measures. It is also very difficult to predict which, if any, of those precautionary measures can be safely reduced or eliminated.

In view of all of this, I find that COVID-19 remains a significant threat to health and safety, and the requirement of mandatory vaccination remains justifiable and reasonable at this point in time.

Are employees who refuse to comply with mandatory vaccination policies eligible for employment insurance benefits?

- LA v Canada Employment Insurance Commission, 2022 SST 219
- Employee left her job for an unpaid leave of absence and applied for EI benefits
- Employer's vaccination policy required all staff to be vaccinated unless there was a medical reason not to obtain vaccination
- Non-compliance resulted in employees being placed on indefinite unpaid leave of absence until they provide acceptable proof of vaccination
- Employee testified that she was exercising her freedom of choice
- Adjudicator determined that Employee voluntarily chose to go on unpaid leave; she understood the consequences of non-compliance with the policy

Are employees who refuse to comply with mandatory vaccination policies eligible for employment insurance benefits?

- To qualify for benefits, Employee must have just cause to leave job voluntarily (i.e. there must be no reasonable alternative to leaving her job when she did).
- Employee testified that she has a fear of needles and experiences anxiety towards the vaccine which is still in an “experimental” phase.
- Adjudicator held that Employee cannot prove just cause in the circumstances – she had a reasonable alternative to leaving: comply with the policy and get vaccinated.
- Employee is disqualified from receiving EI benefits.

Will non-compliance with a mandatory vaccination policy result in just cause termination?

- Arbitration decisions have endorsed policies where employees are put on notice that if they remain unvaccinated or fail to disclose their vaccination status (all subject to human rights legislation). They will be subject to being placed on an unpaid leave of absence and may be subject to termination of employment.
- Chartwell Housing Reit (The Westmount, the Wynfield, the Woodhaven and the Waterford) v Healthcare, Office and Professional Employees Union, Local 2220, 2022 CanLII 6832 (Misra)
  - Arbitrator ruled that a mandatory vaccination policy which included an automatic termination provision for employees who refused to comply was not reasonable pursuant to the parties' collective agreement – employer had failed to consult the union about the changes.
  - Arbitrator did note that her decision should not be taken to mean that employees who choose not to get fully vaccinated are immune from termination due to non-compliance with the policy: “No employer has to leave a non-compliant on a leave of absence indefinitely. At some point, and subject to the Employer warning employees of the possibility of termination, and having considered other factors, it will likely have just cause to terminate the employment of such an employee.”

Ontario (Labour) v Sudbury (City)

2021 ONCA 252

- Struck by incident involving a road grader performing repairs
- Road grader driver was employed by Interpaving Limited
- City of Sudbury contracted Interpaving Limited to complete the road repairs
- Ontario Court of Appeal determined the City of Sudbury was an “employer” within the meaning of the Act
  - Employed one or more workers (inspectors) at the project site
- One person or entity may meet the definition of several different workplace parties
- Act establishes overlapping responsibility for health and safety amongst workplace parties

R v Bondfield Construction Company Limited

2022 ONCA 302

- Arc flash incident
- Ontario Court of Appeal considered whether the Crown established the “actus reus” of two offences
- Provisions of the Occupational Health and Safety Act and regulations are to be interpreted generously
- However, a generous interpretation is not limitless
- “... [Occupational Health and Safety Act] seeks to achieve a reasonable level of worker protection, not an entirely risk-free work environment”
