It's All About Me

Perhaps we shouldn't be surprised given his love of the limelight, but at the end of the day, it seems that last night's elections truly ended up being all about President Trump.

After House Democrats spent eight years in the political wilderness, they have decisively recaptured control of the House of Representatives, having thus far picked up 39 seats, with one race uncalled. This resulted in a Democratic majority in the House of at least 16 seats and possibly as many as 17. If you would like to know how the Democrats were able to do this, please read our analysis that begins on page 7. To see whom we believe will serve as the new leaders in the Congress, turn to page 49. And, to begin thinking about how this change in the composition of the House will affect you and your organization, see page 54.

A record-breaking number of women have been elected to serve in the next Congress, shattering the prior record of 107 currently at the Capitol. While races are still being called, 111 women have won election or reelection across the country so far. They join 10 women in the Senate who weren't up for reelection this year.

In the Senate, Republicans will continue to be in charge for the next two years, having increased their margins by 2 seats pending the outcome of a November 27th runoff in Mississippi, picking up Democratic seats in Florida, Indiana, North Dakota and Missouri, a result that will surely be tremendously gratifying to President Trump, given the considerable time and attention that he devoted to the red states, many of which he won by huge margins in 2016. Democratic incumbents held on to their seats in Montana, New Jersey and West Virginia. The Democrats won both an Arizona open seat and in Nevada where the Republican incumbent was defeated.

Both parties will claim some bragging rights from the results in the most competitive Governors races, each winning positions that will be crucial to the redistricting that will take place in 2021 after the 2020 census.

Democrats have posted important gains winning gubernatorial races in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Kansas, four states that provided the President with their electoral votes in 2016, and which will be indispensable to the President if he runs for re-election in 2020. (Every one of these seats except Pennsylvania was a Democratic pickup.) At the same time, however, Republicans have held on to Governorships in the key states of Florida, Georgia, Iowa and Ohio.

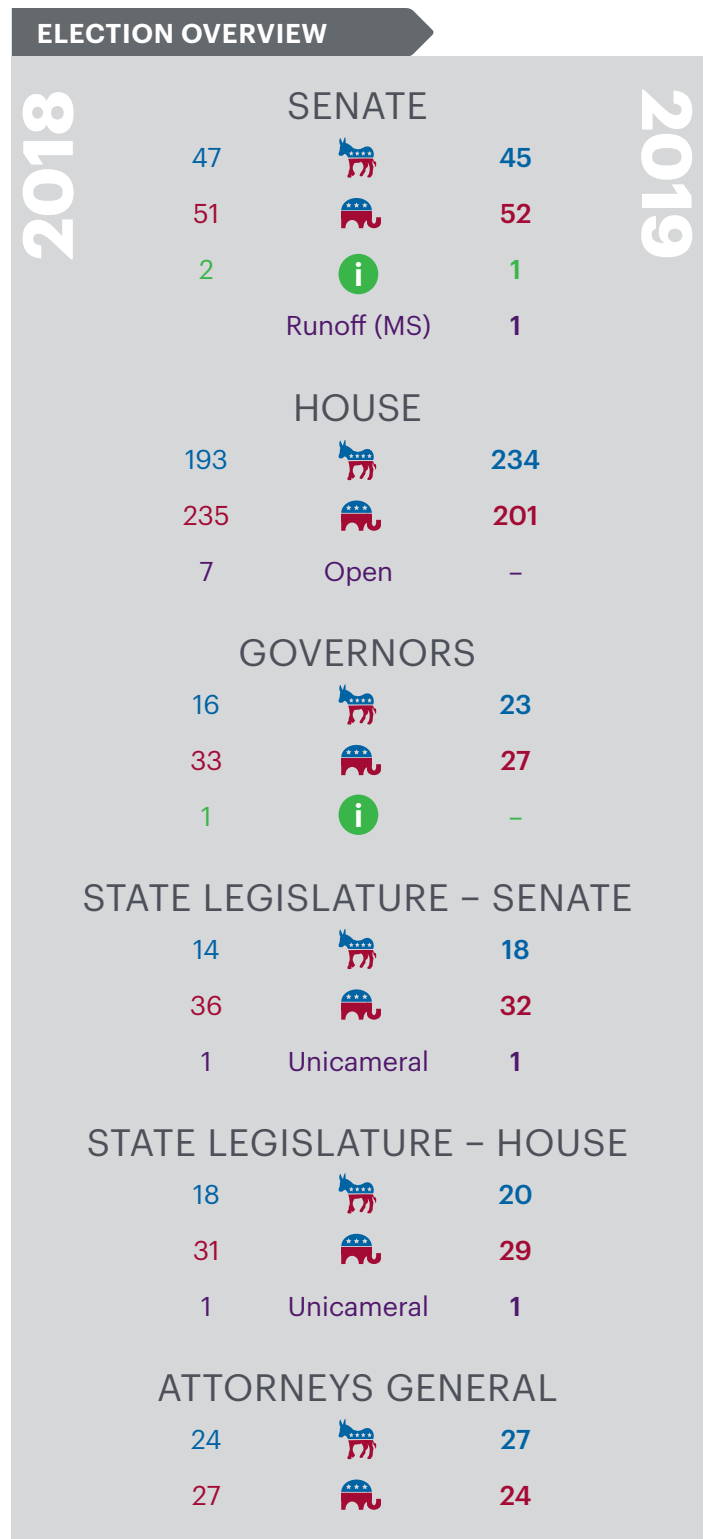

So the bottom line is not all that surprising. Democratic control of the House, continued Republican control of the Senate, and some important Democratic pickups and significant Republican holds in the Governors races, indeed, we have the split decision that most of the pundits had predicted.

As he sprinted for weeks through a series of rallies designed to expand the Republican majority in the Senate, President Trump repeatedly insisted that this election was about him even though he was not on the ballot. In the House races, the voters, especially women and minority voters in suburban districts that Hillary Clinton had won in 2016, took him at his word and they rebuked him, clearly rejecting the president's divisive rhetoric and his apocalyptic vision of what the future would be like with the Democrats in charge.

In the House races, it seems clear that the Democrats' message of hope and health care, a message that resonates with virtually all Democrats, most suburban women and many Independents, clearly trumped President Trump's anti-immigrant message of fear. In the Senate, Republicans were able to win key contested red-state races, even if the margins for those Republicans who picked up Democratic seats were far less impressive than the margins by which President Trump won those states in 2016.

Instead of making the elections all about the "caravan" and alleged hordes of illegal immigrants, no doubt many conventional Republicans, including many of the Republican House members swept out of office last evening, are surely asking, "Why didn't we run on the theme: 'It's still the economy, stupid'?" Yet the answer to that question seems clear: the President insisted that the key theme of the Republicans' campaign be an anti-immigrant message because he believed that such a message would fire up his base in red states and juice up Republican turnout.

The huge differences in the partisan makeup of the states where the Senate was decided and the suburban districts that were crucial to control of the House presented the President and Congressional Republicans with a fundamental choice. House Republicans in districts that Hillary Clinton had won in the last election and in swing districts in the suburbs made it clear early on in this election year that the President's presence in their districts would not be helpful to their re-election bids. In contrast, as many of the key Senate contests took place in states that the President had won decisively in 2016, many Republican Senate candidates in closely contested races chose to tie their candidacies and their electoral fates very tightly to that of the President's.

While the President's active involvement in key, contested Senate races certainly appears to have helped Senate Republicans expand their majority, the proposals that the President offered, his angry 'take-no-prisoners' style and the divisive, flamethrower rhetoric that he used while campaigning for his proposals were simply non-starters for independent voters in many suburban Congressional districts, particularly those that Clinton had won in 2016. They put House Republicans in those districts into a box from which they could not escape as they were forced to defend political positions that were simply fatal in those districts.

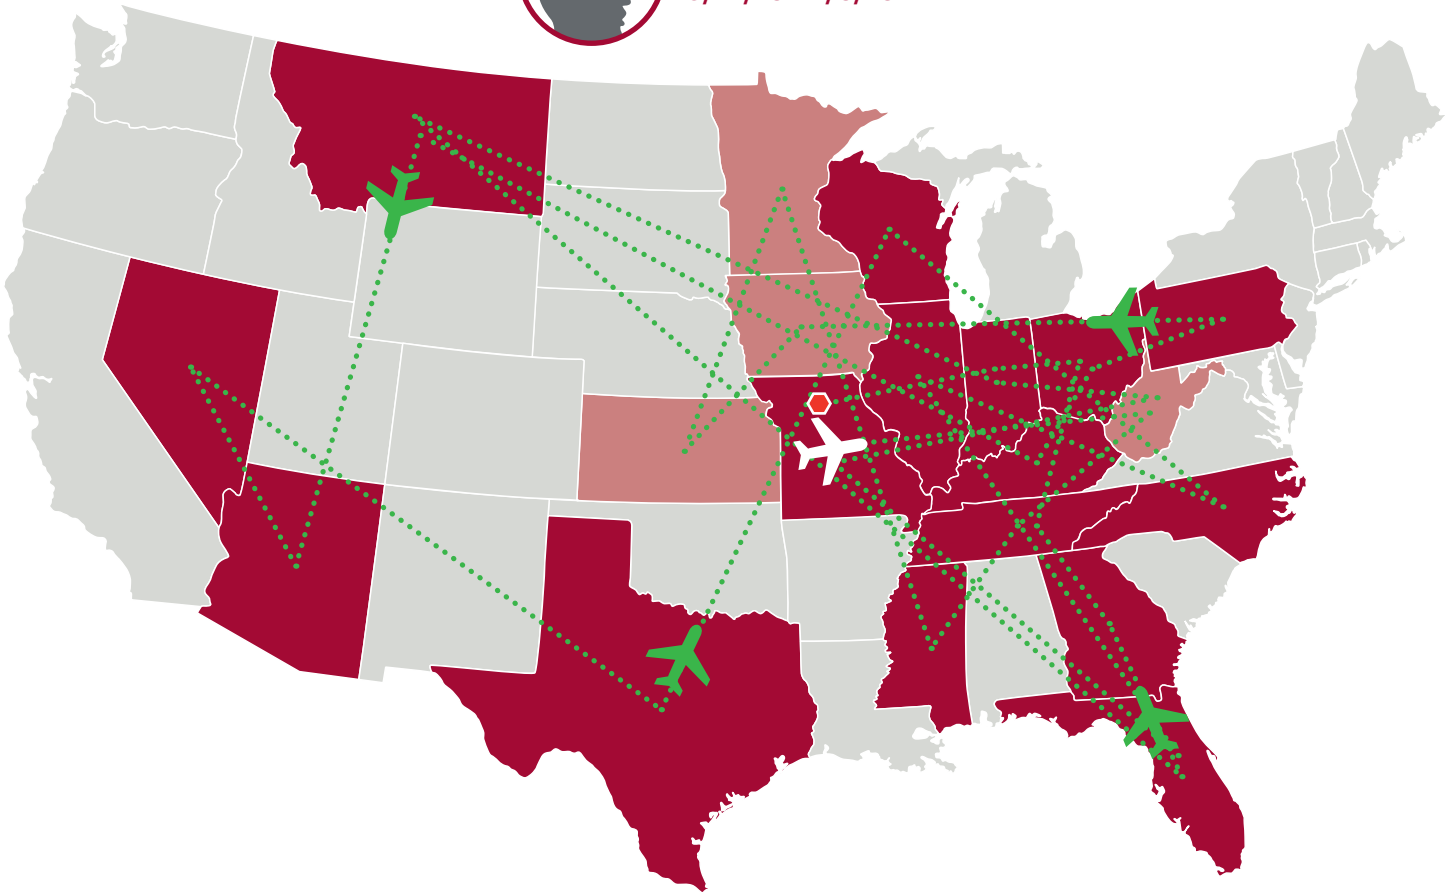

But the same strategy that proved fatal to Republicans' majority in the House of Representatives may ultimately have delivered for the party a wider margin in the critical upper chamber, where a quartet of Democratic members were unseated after voting against Brett Kavanaugh's nomination to the US Supreme Court.

So now that we have it, what does divided government mean for Congress and for public policy? Simply put, unless the President is willing to face the music and work with Congressional Democrats on issues like infrastructure, it is highly unlikely that there will be much in the way of legislative accomplishments in the next two years. With Democrats taking the chairs of all of the House Committees, we can certainly expect a slew of oversight hearings examining many of the issues that Democrats have sought to raise for the last two years, issues that Congressional Republicans and the White House have largely ignored since President Trump took the oath of office. To protect their new majority moving forward, House Democrats must avoid overplaying their hand as they face the tricky issue of navigating the many differences between the most liberal members of their caucus who may want to pursue an impeachment of the President and those members who will want to pursue a more moderate, less controversial course.

Numbers Behind the Results

Senate

Senate Republicans have held a slim 51–49 majority during the 115th Congress. Next Congress, their margin is likely to be 53–47. In a year of uncertainty, the GOP maintained control of the upper chamber by successfully protecting eight of nine seats up for reelection and flipping four Democratic seats. As no candidate obtained a majority, Mississippi has a runoff on November 27th. With 26 seats up for reelection, Democrats fell short in pursuit of a difficult and narrow path to the majority, but they did win seats in Arizona and Nevada.

Toss-Up Race Results

Arizona. Rep. Martha McSally (R-2nd) and Rep. Kyrsten Sinema (D-9th) pulled no punches in a bitter race to fill retiring Senator Jeff Flake's (R-AZ) open seat that focused heavily on immigration and health care issues. Sinema has been declared the winner.

Florida. Incumbent Democratic Senator Bill Nelson was considered very vulnerable heading into Tuesday's elections, squaring off against a polished and well-funded opponent in current Republican Florida Governor Rick Scott. After a hand recount, Scott defeated Nelson by about 10,000 votes.

Indiana. Incumbent Joe Donnelly was the first Senate Democrat to fall on Tuesday night, losing in a race that wasn't close after all to corporate executive and former Indiana State Representative Mike Braun.

Mississippi. Cindy Hyde-Smith (R-MS), the junior Senator from Mississippi, will face a run-off election against Mike Espy, former Secretary of Agriculture under President Bill Clinton, on November 27th. Neither candidate in this surprisingly tight race was able to reach the 50 percent mark needed to win outright.

Missouri. State Attorney General and GOP Josh Hawley soundly defeated Democratic incumbent Claire McCaskill. President Trump visited the Show-Me State three times in the two months leading up to the election.

Montana. Two-term Democratic incumbent John Tester, well-regarded in his home state, narrowly defeated Montana State Auditor Matt Rosendale despite the fact that President Trump won Montana by nearly 20 points in 2016.

115TH US SENATE

116TH US SENATE

New Jersey. Despite avoiding conviction in a criminal trial and emerging mostly unscathed from a corresponding Congressional ethics investigation, some predicted that Democratic incumbent and Senate Foreign Relations Committee Ranking Member Bob Menendez was in jeopardy of losing his seat. Menendez proved his doubters wrong with a resounding but perhaps not surprising victory over biopharmaceutical executive Bob Hugin in a state that hasn't elected a Republican Senator since 1972.

Nevada. Incumbent Republican Senator Dean Heller had the unenviable position as the Democratic party's top Senate GOP target this cycle. Heller's longtime status as the most vulnerable member of the Senate GOP proved accurate, as he was dispatched by Democratic Congresswoman Jacky Rosen in a race that was never really close.

Tennessee. In an open race for retiring Republican Senator Bob Corker's seat, many believed that former Democratic Tennessee Governor and Mayor of Nashville Phil Bredesen was well-positioned to defeat Republican Congresswoman Marsha Blackburn. Despite polling neck-and-neck for much of the year up to election day, Blackburn cruised to victory by about a 10-point margin.

Texas. Democratic party darling Beto O'Rourke's rapid rise to national stardom has perhaps cemented him as a future star, but he won't be the next junior senator from Texas. O'Rourke fell short by 3% in his pursuit of securing what would've been a massive upset victory over incumbent Republican Senator Ted Cruz. Texas voters haven't sent a Democrat to the Senate in 20 years.

House Overview of Competitive Races (organized by region)

Thus far, in recapturing control of the House, Democrats have picked up a net 38 seats.

New England (CT, MA, ME, NH, RI, VT)

In Maine, Democrat Jared Golden defeated the Republican Incumbent Bruce Poliquin. As no candidate won a majority, ranked-choice voting procedures were used to determine the winner. Otherwise, there were no changes of party in the states of New England.

Mid Atlantic (NJ, NY, PA)

In this region, Democrats picked up 11 seats and Republicans picked up 1 seat. In New Jersey 3, Democrat Andy Kim defeated the Republican incumbent Tom McArthur. In NJ 2, Democrat Jeff Van Drew, and in NJ 11, Democrat Mikie Sherill picked up open seat contests. In NJ 7, one of the suburban districts that favored Hillary Clinton, Democrat Tom Malinowski, a veteran of the Obama State Department, defeated the five-term GOP incumbent Leonard Lance.

In New York, Democrats picked up 3 seats defeating three Republican incumbents. In NY 11, in one of the mild surprises of the night Democrat Max Rose, a veteran, defeated the Republican incumbent Dan Donovan. In NY 19, Democrat Antonio Delgado defeated John Faso and in NY 22, Democratic state legislator Anthony Brandisi narrowly defeated Claudia Tenney.

As a result of redistricting ordered by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, there will be major changes in the Pennsylvania Congressional delegation. Democrats have picked up three seats in open seat races and a fourth seat in a member versus member contest, while in PA 14, Republican Guy Reschenthaler will be coming to Congress. In the open seat races, in PA 5, Democrat Mary Scanlan easily won election over Pearl Kim. In PA 6, the Philadelphia suburbs, Democrat Chrissy Houlahan defeated Republican Greg McAuley. In PA 7, the Allentown area, Democrat Susan Wild defeated the Republican Marty Nothstein and in the Member race in PA 17, Democratic Congressman Conor Lamb defeated Republican Congressman Keith Rothfus.

115TH US HOUSE

South Atlantic

In Virginia, Democrats defeated three Republican incumbents. In VA 2, Elaine Luria defeated Republican Scott Taylor. In VA 7, in a very closely contested race, Democrat Abigail Spanberger, a former CIA operative, defeated Republican Congressman Dave Brat, a well-known member of the House Freedom Caucus. In VA 10, Democratic state senator Jennifer Wexton defeated a long-time Democratic target, Republican Congresswoman Barbara Comstock who was seeking a third term.

Democrats picked up two seats in Florida. In FL 26, Democrat Debbie Mucarsel-Powell, an immigrant from Ecuador and former Dean of the Florida International University's School of Medicine narrowly defeated two-term Republican incumbent Congressman Carlos Curbelo. In FL 27, an open seat race to replace long-time Republican Congresswoman Ileana Ros Lehtinen, Democrat Donna Shalala, a former HHS Secretary in the Clinton Administration and former President of the University of Miami, will be coming to Washington. At the age of 77, Shalala is believed to be the oldest freshman ever to become a member of the House.

In South Carolina 1, in one of the true surprises of the evening, Democrat Joe Cunningham defeated Republican Katie Arrington. Arrington, a Donald Trump supporter, had pulled off one of the major upsets of the primary season when she defeated the sitting Republican Congressman, former Governor Mark Sanford in the primary.

In Georgia 6, Democrat Lucy McBath defeated Republican incumbent Karen Handel. In GA 7, incumbent Congressman Rob Woodall narrowly leads Democrat Carolyn Bourdeaux. This race is in a recount.

East North Central (IL, IN, MI, OH, WI)

Democrats defeated two Republican incumbents in Illinois. In IL 6, Democrat Sean Casten defeated veteran Congressman Peter Roskam and in IL 14, Democrat Lauren Underwood, a nurse who worked in the Obama administration, defeated Congressman Randy Hultgren.

In Michigan 11, Democrat Haley Stevens defeated Republican Lena Epstein in an open seat race. In MI 8, Democrat Elissa Slotkin, a former Obama Defense Department official, narrowly defeated Republican incumbent Congressman Mike Bishop.

Midwest

WEST NORTH CENTRAL (IA, KS, MO, MN, NE, ND, SD)

In Iowa, Democrats picked up the seats of two Republican incumbents. In IA 1, Democrat Abby Finkenauer defeated Republican Rod Blum while in IA 3, Cindy Axne defeated David Young. In the Kansas 3, Democrat Sharice Davids will be coming to Congress. Minnesota's Congressional delegation will have a number of changes. In MN 2, Democrat Angie Craig defeated Republican Congressman Jason Lewis and in MN 3, Democrat Dean Phillips defeated Republican Congressman Erik Paulsen. In MN 1, an open seat race, Republican Jim Hagedorn picked up a Democratic seat with a narrow win over Democrat Dan Feehan. In MN 8, another open seat race, Republican Pete Stauber also picked up a Democratic seat defeating Democrat Joe Radinovich.

WEST SOUTH CENTRAL (AR, LA, OK, TX)

In perhaps the biggest surprise of the night in the House, in Oklahoma 5, a seat that has been Republican since 1975, Democrat Kendra Horn defeated Republican incumbent Congressman Steve Russell. In Texas, Democrats picked up two seats: TX 7 where Democrat Lizzie Fletcher defeated the Republican incumbent John Culberson, and TX 32, in the Dallas suburbs, where Democrat Colin Allred defeated 10-term Republican Congressman Pete Sessions, a former chair of the House Republican Campaign Committee and the current Chairman of the House Rules Committee.

MARGIN OF HOUSE CONTROL AFTER ELECTION

WEST MOUNTAIN (AZ, CO, ID, MT, NV, NM, UT, WY)

In Arizona, in an open seat race in AZ 1, former Democratic Congresswoman Ann Kirkpatrick will be returning to Congress. In Colorado, in CO 6, the Denver suburbs, Democrat Jason Crow has defeated Republican Congressman Mike Coffman who has represented the district since 2009. In Utah, in UT 4, Democrat Ben McAdams has defeated Republican Congresswoman Mia Love. In the Montana At Large district, Republican incumbent Congressman, Greg Gianforte, a Trump favorite, will be returning to Congress.

PACIFIC (CA, OR, WA)

The Democratic wave crashed hard in California wiping out all 4 GOP seats in Orange County. In total, Democrats picked up 6 seats in the Golden State. A competitive race in Washington 8, where virtually all ballots are done by mail, went to the Democrats.

Governors

Republicans entered Tuesday's elections controlling the governor's mansion in 33 states, but by night's end were bracing for a landslide collapse of the historic highwater mark the party achieved four years earlier.

For state and local Republicans, the Obama years were good — record-breaking, even.

But the 2018 map, which forced Republicans to defend a dizzying 26 seats, historic precedent and national political currents have left the party's one-time iron grip on the levers of state power decidedly weaker.

Republicans' modern advantage in the states dates to the 1994 midterm elections, when Democrats held 29 governor's seats in a cycle where a rising red tide swept clean the halls of the U.S. House of Representatives. That advantage has only swelled in years since and even trickled down-ballot to state legislative contests.

TODAY:

- Republicans boast 26 so-called trifectas, or states where the party controls the executive branch and both legislative bodies.
- Roughly 48 percent of Americans live in states where Republicans boast complete control on state government.
- Sixteen of the 26 states Republicans are defending were rated by election handicappers as battlegrounds.

2019 GOVERNORS

Democrats have won seven races (IL, KS, ME, MI, NV, NM and WI) in states currently governed by Republicans. Republicans have not captured a seat held by a Democratic Governor, but they did win a seat in Alaska that had been held by an Independent, and they surprised some observers by keeping control of statehouses in Florida, Georgia and Ohio. The shift will likely have a long-term impact on the party composition of the House. Governors elected yesterday will still be in office when congressional districts are redrawn after the 2020 Census. Republicans held 29 Governorships after the 2010 Census and helped tilt the House playing field toward their party. They will hold fewer Governor's mansions this time around, with their Democratic counterparts holding power in the states with the lion's share of congressional districts.

State Legislatures

Democrats entered Tuesday's elections poised to recoup some of the local legislative power the party lost in statehouses during the Obama years, buoyed by sharp national enthusiasm and an eagerness to own a redistricting advantage ahead of the next midterm congressional showdown.

It was a remarkable reversal of expectations, if not fortunes, from the previous eight years, which saw Democrats lose 29 legislative chambers, the highest electoral deficit since World War II.

When the sun rose Tuesday morning, Republicans controlled 67 of the nation's 99 legislative chambers. (Nebraska, uniquely, is the lone state in the union that features a unicameral, non-partisan legislature body.) All told, that added up to 4,134 of more than 7,300 legislative seats.

BY THE NUMBERS:

- Tuesday's elections featured 28 battleground chambers, with 12 controlled by Republicans.
- 13 Republican trifectas — that is, states where one party controls the governor's mansion and both legislative chambers — and five Democratic were rated vulnerable by pollsters.

SOME HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE:

- The party holding the White House has lost state legislative seats in 27 of the last 29 midterm elections.
- In 2010, the most recent midterm election for a first-term president, Democrats had to defend 25 state legislative bodies that were in play, more than double the battlegrounds that Republicans were forced to defend this year. That year, 23 chambers flipped control to GOP hands and another flipped their favor in 2014.

2018 STATE LEGISLATURE - SENATE

2019 STATE LEGISLATURE - SENATE

While interest in the personalities and policies litigated in these races was almost universally cannibalized by statewide and federal contests, former U.S. Speaker Tip O'Neill would caution you to remember that "all politics is local." Don't underestimate the importance of these contests, which in sum wield profound power in shaping our national political zeitgeist through once-a-decade congressional redistricting process.

State legislatures are solely responsible for drawing the lines of congressional districts in 37 states, while the task in six other states falls to independent commissions and to political commissions in the remaining seven.

State Attorneys General

The New York Attorney General initiated more than 100 legal or administrative actions against Republican Donald Trump's White House in the space of just one year, while California's top cop won an expanded $6.5 million budget for the express purpose of obstructing 1600 Pennsylvania.

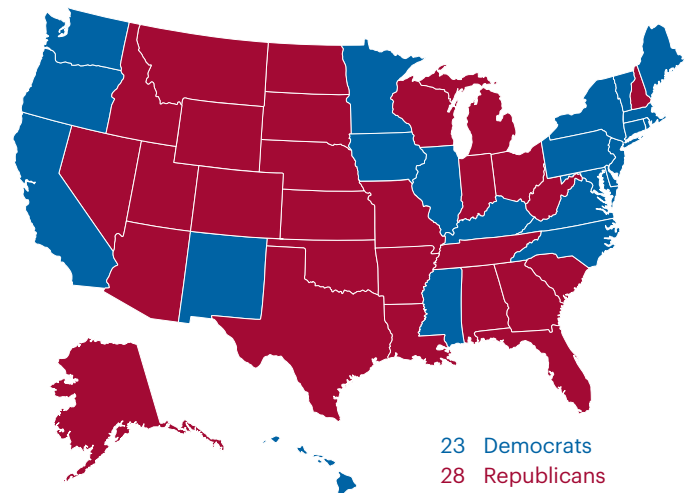

That dynamic, which Republicans perfected under the previous administration, explains why elections that might historically have been regarded as self-contained contests to serve as a state's top law enforcement official became instead a national referendum on the White House's executive actions with Democrats vowing to weaponize the office of state attorney general against President Donald Trump.

THE MAP:

- Republicans had to defend 17 seats, of which six were open, while Democrats had just 12.
- Handicappers rated eight of the 12 open seats as battleground toss-ups.
- Five hotly contested toss-ups were being vacated by Republicans. An additional two seats featuring Republican incumbents were similarly rated as battlegrounds.

Of the 43 states in which the office of attorney general is popularly elected, 30 held elections Tuesday. But despite Democrats' best efforts to portray the office of attorney general as a staging ground for the resistance, the anti-Trump fervor that delivered Rep. Nancy Pelosi a majority in the House of Representatives achieved mixed results in state AG races.

Ballot Initiatives

Elected officials in 37 states punted consideration of some of the nation's most controversial social issues to voters Tuesday, asking the public to register a final opinion on cannabis decriminalization, criminal justice reform, and restrictions on reproductive rights.

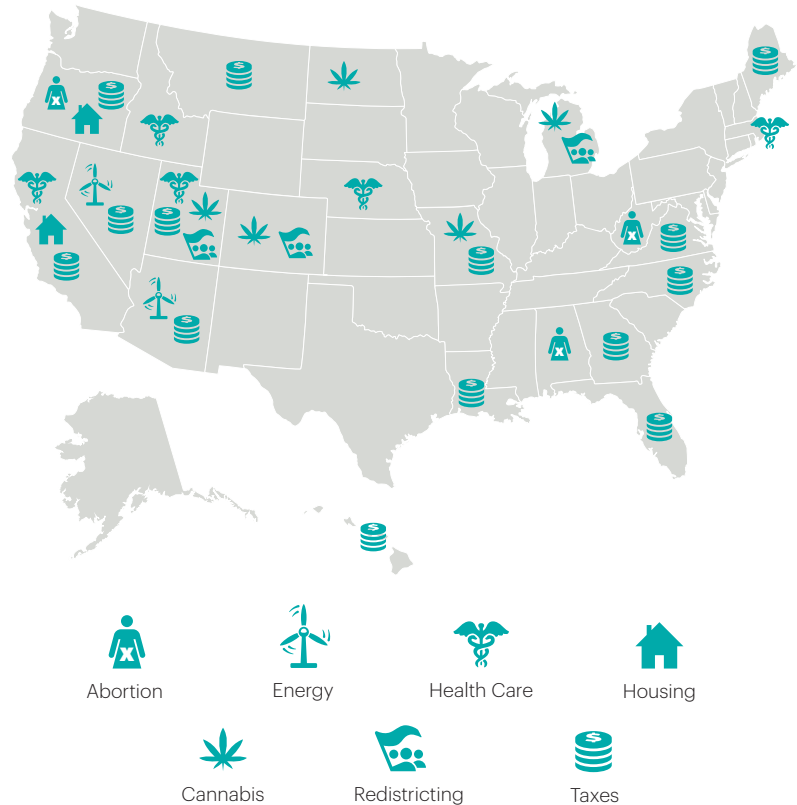

Some were initiated by citizens while others were driven by lawmakers, but almost all of the 155 questions found on Tuesday's ballots were thorny propositions that would affect some of the most delicate, personal aspects of life in the United States.

BY THE NUMBERS:

- In even-numbered election years — that is to say, federal midterm or presidential contests — the average number of statewide initiatives clocks in at 173.
- Sixty-four of the 155 ballot questions were citizen-initiated, while 81 were binding propositions referred to the ballot by state legislatures. Another seven, all in Florida, were referred by the Florida Constitution Revision Commission (CRC), and the final three were advisory votes or automatically referred to voters.

ON THE ISSUES:

- Voters in three states were asked whether to expand use, both recreationally and medicinally, or to decriminalize cannabis. In Missouri, voters were asked to weigh in on three similar if competing pro-medical marijuana questions. [In at least 3 of the 4 states, early numbers are pro-cannabis.]
- Questions of criminal justice reform, including an initiative that would reopen the voting franchise to more than 1 million felons living in Florida and another to reduce the penalty for drug offense committed in opioid-wracked Ohio, were put to voters in 10 states. [In early numbers, all but 1 of these questions are likely to pass. That said, one of these "yes" questions includes one that would bar felons from serving (in Louisiana)].
- Two states were asked whether to lift the minimum wage. [Leaning towards yes in early numbers in both states.]
- There were five questions in five states asking whether to expand Medicaid.
- Three measures in three states would have restricted access to an abortion.

THE RESULTS:

Cannabis. Voters in Missouri and Utah approved ballot measures legalizing medical marijuana in their states, while North Dakota citizens rejected a ballot initiative that would have legalized medical marijuana. A ballot measure in Michigan to legalize marijuana for recreational use was passed by voters.

Criminal Justice. Florida voters passed a ballot measure that would restore the voting rights of approximately 1.6 million Felons by amending the state constitution.

Minimum Wage. Missouri voters passed a ballot measure that would raise the state's minimum wage to $12/hour, and Arkansas Voters voted to raise the state's minimum wage to $11/hour.

Medicaid Expansion. Idaho, Nebraska and Utah voters passed ballot measures expanding Medicaid coverage within the states.

Abortion Restriction. Voters in Alabama and West Virginia passed ballot measures that restrict access to abortions and expand protections for unborn children while Oregon voters rejected a similar measure.

Firsts

Tuesday's elections delivered for the country a raft of historic firsts as minority and women candidates shattered barriers and expectations as old as the country itself.

From the nation's first native American congresswomen to the first female governors of Maine and South Dakota, trailblazing candidates made history Tuesday in virtually every corner of the country for racial, sexual, and religious minorities.

A record-breaking slate of women candidates for federal office yielded a number of national and state firsts, including the country's first Muslim congresswoman, the first female US Senator from Arizona and Tennessee, the first congresswomen from Iowa.

African Americans also scored historic wins with the first black House members from Massachusetts and Connecticut and the first black statewide office holder in New York, while a pair of Latinas became the first congresswomen to represent Texas. At the same time, California elected the nation's first Korean-American member of Congress and Michigan elected the chamber's first Somali-American.

Just 50 years ago, white men represented 97 percent of the House of Representatives. But Tuesday's victors offer an increasingly diverse America evidence that its government is finally being remade in their image.

Demographics

Republicans fared well with Latino voters in districts that they defended. Of 40 districts with Latino voters comprising at least 14% of the district, Republicans won 25 of them, with nine races yet to be called. Simply put, Latino voters didn't show up in these districts, particularly in Texas, where Democrats and outside groups made a concerted effort to increase Latino turnout. Of 18 such districts in that state, Republicans held 16 of them.

Republicans defended moderately well in some of the more educated House districts in the country, as they held almost 50% with seven races outstanding. This is especially true across much of the South, as Republicans maintained control of more than three quarters of the seats where at least 34% of registered voters hold a Bachelor's degree. Democrats made some gains in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and a scattering of Midwest seats with these voters, but overall educated voters broke relatively evenly in GOP controlled seats.

Republicans fared similarly well in wealthy districts they defended. Of 60 GOP-held districts where the median income level of the district was $67K or above, Republicans held 31 seats, with 11 races still outstanding. Wealthy Texas voters were the most reliably Republican, and Democrats made gains with wealthy voters in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. However, overall this demographic was not surprisingly supportive of both parties on Election Day.

Policy in a Democratic House

Chastened by Hillary Clinton's stunning 2016 defeat, Democrats spent much of the fall campaign cautiously skirting questions of the party's would-be governing agenda even as polls predicted a blue tsunami that would wash President Donald Trump's allies from Washington almost wholesale.

But as the polls closed Tuesday and early returns confirmed at least conditionally the prevailing political wisdom, Democratic leaders finally dispensed with the circumspection to deliver an unmistakable message to the White House: Donald Trump's free ride in Congress is over.

Both the president and the presumptive Democratic speaker, Rep. Nancy Pelosi, delivered early-morning paeans to bipartisanship in post-election messages, but the new power dynamic and the anti-Trump anger that fueled it might not allow it. Instead, the most practical, imminent and sustained consequence of Tuesday's elections is the wide latitude Democrats will enjoy to investigate and exercise oversight over the President and his White House.

The next two years will be dominated by steady and hostile inquiries into Mr. Trump's businesses, including his tax filings and business and philanthropic dealings, and any nexus to Russia.

The results mark a bitter, if not predictable, setback for the Republican legislative agenda ahead of the 2020 presidential race. Now, Trump and his allies in the House must not only cooperate with moderate Democrats on the periphery but a leadership that has shown remarkable adept at keeping rank.

Finally controlling what legislative advances to the floor after suffering eight years in the minority, Democratic leadership will likely sidestep demands for impeachment of the president by pursuing a progressive wish-list that includes single-payer health care, cap and trade, and a repeal of this year's Republican tax code rewrite.

POTENTIAL INVESTIGATIONS IN A DEMOCRATIC-CONTROLLED HOUSE

Core Oversight

- James Comey's firing
- 2020 Census decision
- Transgender ban in the military
- Travel ban
- Family separations
- WH security clearances

Corruption and Good Governance

- 2016 election payments to silence Trump accusers
- Trump's dealings with Russia
- Personal email use in the White House
- Election security
- Trump Organization and emoluments clause
- Tax Returns
