Global Situation Update: March 1, 2022

WHAT WE'RE WATCHING

China is conducting an ad-hoc naval exercise in the South China Sea. The surprise military drill was launched after a US warship passed nearby and amid the war in Ukraine. The multi-day snap maneuvers follow statements from Chinese officials that Beijing is closely watching the situation in Ukraine and that Russia's security demands should be properly addressed.

In early February, China and Russia vowed to support each other in standoffs with the West. China, however, is certainly not pledging unconditional or unlimited support for Russia in Ukraine, much less military support, which it will not consider. After all, China is Ukraine's largest trade partner and a significant investor that wants to preserve good relations with Kyiv.

Global

Initial talks between Russia and Ukraine concluded without results yesterday. More talks are planning “in the coming days.”

- Russian reinforcements are converging on Ukraine’s capital with greater firepower. In Ukraine’s second largest city, Kharkiv, Russian forces began using area-attack weapons, dramatically increasing damage to civilian infrastructure and civilian casualties.
- The hacker collective Anonymous has claimed credit for several cyberattacks that took down Russian government websites and state-backed news outlets in recent days. Pro-Russian cybercriminals, such as Conti, BlackCat and CoomingProject, have posted their intentions to increase targeting of Western countries.

Markets & Business

US payment card firms Visa Inc and Mastercard Inc have blocked multiple Russian financial institutions from their network, complying with government sanctions.

- Shell will exit all its Russian operations, including a major liquefied natural gas plant.
- Major investors, including hedge fund Man Group and British asset manager abrdn announced they were cutting their positions in Russia in the wake of the country's invasion of Ukraine.
- Google announced that effective today Russia Today (RT) and Sputnik will have their channels blocked on YouTube.
- An Australian government agency filed a lawsuit today accusing casino operator Crown Resorts Ltd of "serious and systemic noncompliance" with anti-money laundering laws, complicating a $6.3 billion buyout by Blackstone Inc.
- Danish shipping giant Maersk announced that it was suspending new orders from and to Russian ports, excluding food, medical and humanitarian goods due to sanctions.

Environment, Sustainability & Governance

A new report by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) issued a "dire warning" to the financial system, saying that most institutions have not pledged sufficient funding to adapt to uncertain climate change risks.

- A European Commission expert panel tasked with developing a social taxonomy for human rights-related financing, similar to its sustainable financing framework, published a draft report outlining a social taxonomy, published a proposed framework. The taxonomy's suggested structure focuses on the key objectives of decent work, adequate living standards and wellbeing for end-users, and inclusive and sustainable communities and societies, with sub-objectives including health and safety, healthcare, housing, wages, non-discrimination, consumer health, and communities' livelihoods.
- Germany announced a plan to source 100 percent of energy from renewables by 2035.

Implications of Russia's War Against Ukraine for International Alliances

By Alexander Lucaci

President Putin's decision to invade Ukraine has reinvigorated European political alliances and united the international community against Russia, possibly to a degree unseen in modern history.

Ukrainian military forces across the country continue to repel Russia's invasion as the conflict enters its fifth day. Military analysts believe that despite the surprising resiliency of Ukraine's armed forces, Russia's quantitative and qualitative superiority will eventually prevail in achieving Moscow's end goal, which appears to be the occupation of Kyiv and installation of pro-Kremlin Ukrainian leadership. Russia has thus far declined to utilize the full capacity of its combat power surrounding Ukraine, with US officials assessing that only 75 percent of those Russian military forces have been deployed inside the country. Moscow was likely expecting a quick and decisive victory and underestimated Ukrainian resistance in both the military and civilian spheres. Russia is reportedly now adapting siege tactics in its slow advance on Kyiv, with the possible aim of blockading the city and winning the war through attrition.

President Putin's decision to invade Ukraine has reinvigorated European political alliances and united the international community against Russia, possibly to a degree unseen in modern history. The risk of Russian expansion of the conflict outside of Ukraine remains high, especially to former Soviet states in eastern Europe and the caucuses. Putin has declared the unification of ethnic Russians within Russia's borders as a pretext for military invasion. It is therefore possible that countries such as Moldova, Georgia, or even the Baltic nations may come under threat of partition given the high numbers of ethnic Russians residing therein. The Suwalki Gap, a narrow strip of land on the border with Poland and Lithuania, is another potential flashpoint as it separates Belarus with Kaliningrad, a Russian territorial enclave in the heart of Europe. The risk of a broader European conflict is also high, as the extent of President Putin's ambitions is unknown and there is the clear potential for military miscalculations with NATO-aligned countries along Ukraine's border.

The European Union has reacted with unprecedented speed and unanimity to Russian hostilities in Ukraine. The bloc, in coordination with the UK, US, and the G20 has approved and enacted severe sanctions against key Russian economic institutions and political leaders, sending a shockwave through Russian financial markets and creating severe consequences for the rouble, domestic inflation, while also cutting off access to international capital and their own dollar reserves. The EU's united foreign policy over the past several days has accelerated conversations about developing European "strategic autonomy," which could include advanced defense capabilities and the possibility of creating of an EU army. Furthermore, discussions around EU expansion are likely to occur in the coming days and weeks, with Albania, Montenegro, Serbia, and Turkey currently candidates for membership in the bloc. Ukraine itself has also formally applied for EU membership in the midst of the conflict, a mostly symbolic gesture aiming to boost morale within the country. Expansion of NATO is also a strong likelihood in the medium term – Sweden and Finland, both EU non-NATO states, have held strategic meetings with the defense alliance over the last several days in an effort to bolster their own deterrents against possible Russian aggression in the Arctic circle. In effect, Russia's invasion of Ukraine has accelerated several processes that President Putin has sought to hedge against – a renewed sense of purpose and unity within the European Union, as well as the increased attractiveness of NATO membership as a security guarantee.

Ukraine Crisis Update: Failed Talks, Thermobaric Weapons, Diplomats PNG'ed

The Conflict in Ukraine is expected to escalate over the next 24 hours.

Failed Talks

Talks between Russia and Ukraine concluded without results yesterday. Kyiv is seeking a ceasefire and departure of Russian troops. Moscow seeks recognition of Russian sovereignty over Crimea, and “demilitarizing and de-nazifying” of the Ukrainian state and ensuring its neutral status, meaning that it gives up a right to join the NATO alliance. The parties announced plans to talk again without providing a new date. Conditions are not rip for diplomacy, as both parties view gains on the battlefield as necessary to increase their respective negotiating leverage.

Battlefield Developments

Yesterday, Russia continued to reorganize its forces and logistics to adjust for poor planning and execution based on incorrect assumptions that the Ukraine army would collapse, lacking the will to fight. Russian reinforcements are converging on Ukraine’s capital with greater firepower. Satellite photos show a convoy of Russian armored vehicles, tanks, artillery and support vehicles north of Ukraine's capital stretching for 65 kilometers. In Ukraine’s second largest city, Kharkiv, Russian forces began using area-attack weapons, including rocket artillery, dramatically increasing damage to civilian infrastructure and civilian casualties. Military analysts warn of scorch earth tactics used in Chechnya.

The British defense ministry reported that Russia has failed to gain control of the airspace over Ukraine prompting a shift to night operations in an attempt to reduce their losses. The Ukrainian government claimed that Russian hit an oil depot in Okhtyrka, in the northeastern border region of Sumy Oblast, with a thermobaric weapon (vacuum bomb) known as the most deadly non-nuclear bomb. This has not been independently confirmed. The next major phase of the Russian offensive will likely launch within the next 24 hours and play out over the ensuing 47-72 hours, according to military analysts at the US-based think tank Institute of War. Russian and Belarusian forces may be preparing a new axis of invasion from Belarus into Western Ukraine. An offensive in Western Ukraine would likely seek to cut off Western assistance through Poland,

Slovakia and Hungary. The Belarus government is disputing claims that it has deployed units.

Political, Economic and Civil Society Developments

The European parliament will discuss the events unfolding in Ukraine today. Ukraine's President Zelenskyy is scheduled to speak and is expected to repeat his call for immediate acceptance into the EU.

The effort to politically, economically and socially isolate Russia continues to gain traction.

The US is expelling 12 Russian UN diplomats for allegedly engaging in espionage, i.e., declaring them persona non grata.

More international companies are announcing plans to withdraw from Russian operations. There is an active official and grassroots effort in social media naming and shaming Western companies for advancing Russian interests through commercial activities. For example, France's finance minister is pressuring TotalEnergies to review its business in the country.

Yesterday, the Russian rouble plunged 30 percent against the US dollar before recovering slightly. Yesterday, the central bank and the finance ministry ordered exporting companies, which include some of the world's biggest energy producers from Gazprom to Rosneft, to sell 80 percent of their forex revenues on the market, as the central bank's own ability to intervene on currency markets was curbed. Russia's central bank announced that stocks and derivatives trading on the Moscow exchange will remain closed today for a second day.

The EU has frozen the assets and imposed a travel ban on more than half a dozen of Russia's most prominent oligarchs, many of them with close ties to President Putin.

The International Olympic Committee (IOC) had urged bodies to exclude Russian athletes and officials from international events, throwing into confusion on whether Russian athletes will be permitted to compete at the Paralympics, scheduled to start in Beijing on March 4. There has been a cascade of announcements through the sporting world on bans. FIFA has banned Russia from the World Cup in Qatar. The International Skating Union has also banned Russian competitors from international events.
